Money laundering prevention - application for exemption from the duty to prepare documentation of risk analysis activities

As an obliged party according to the Money Laundering Act (GwG), you must determine and assess risks of money laundering and terrorist funding related to your business activities and properly document related internal safety measures in the form of a risk analysis. In certain circumstances, you can be exempted from the duty to document a risk analysis on application.

Exemption from the duty to document

- only applies to the future regular documentation duty
- does not apply to the duty to carry out an initial risk analysis
- you still need to determine and assess risks of money laundering and terrorism funding on an ongoing basis and take suitable internal prevention measures.

In the brochures and leaflets under "More information" you will find more detailed advice and practical examples on how to do a risk analysis.

Procedure:

1. As an obliged party, you can apply with the competent authority to be exempted from the duty to prepare documentation of risk analysis activities.
